Artificial insemination is performed when a pregnancy cannot be conceived from the spouse's sperm.

The insemination is conducted using a frozen sperm suspension only, taken from a well-known sperm bank, licensed by the Ministry of Health.

The sperm suspension is injected into the womb using a sterile catheter, through an intra-vaginal, intra-cervical or intra-uterine approach. The known chances of treatment success depend on the causes of infertility, and are approximately 15% per one treatment course.

regarding the donor insemination, the tests and treatments involved, the method of performance and chances of success (henceforth: "the treatment").

We have been given an explanation concerning the possible side effects including: mild abdominal pain and mild hemorrhage, which subside gradually within a few hours of the insemination.

In addition, we have been given an explanation concerning the possible complication of infection of the internal genitalia, which may be accompanied by pain and/or high fever and will require hospitalization, and in rare cases, cause obstruction of the fallopian tubes.

We have been told that the use of frozen sperm, despite all the tests performed on it, is not completely devoid of the possibility of disease transmission.

We have been told that there is no guarantee that the woman will conceive as a result of the insemination, or that she will give birth as a result of the insemination.

In addition, there is a possibility of complications during the pregnancy and delivery, and the possibility that the child(ren) born may be physically or mentally abnormal, or suffer from defects, or abnormalities, as well as genetic predispositions or any other anomaly, just as in natural pregnancies.

We agree that the donor or donors of the sperm used to inseminate the woman, or the sperm itself, will be selected by the physician, exclusively at his/her discretion and that we will not be entitled to know the _____
